

The Order of New Brunswick

Purpose

Established in December 2000, the Order of New Brunswick (ONB) is the highest honour awarded by the province to recognize individuals who have demonstrated excellence and achievement and who have made outstanding contributions to the social, cultural or economic well-being of New Brunswick and its residents.

Who is eligible?

- Any Canadian citizen who is a present or former long-term resident of New Brunswick is eligible for nomination to the Order of New Brunswick.
- Individuals must have contributed significantly to the social, cultural or economic well-being of New Brunswick and its residents by demonstrating excellence and achievement in a given area.
- Elected representatives currently serving in the House of Commons, the Senate, the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick and judges of any court are not eligible for nomination.

Will the ONB be conferred posthumously?

The Order of New Brunswick may be conferred posthumously if an individual's name has been approved for membership prior to that individual's death and, in exceptional circumstances, in respect of an individual who is nominated after his or her death.

How are the recipients chosen?

An independent group called the Order of New Brunswick Advisory Council recommends the appointment of members to the Order each year after considering all the nominations received. There are no fixed quotas or categories, but there is a maximum number of 10 appointments annually. Unsuccessful nominations are automatically carried forward for a total of three years. All information received is confidential.

Who is on the ONB Advisory Council?

- The Chief Justice of New Brunswick (alternating with Queen's Bench), as chairperson.
- The Clerk of the Executive Council.
- The president of a provincially funded university (rotation).
- Three to five other members from the community appointed by the Executive Council.

What do members of the ONB receive and when?

Once a year at an investiture ceremony, the Lieutenant-Governor, as Chancellor of the Order of New Brunswick, presents each recipient with a medal in the form of a stylized purple violet, the provincial floral emblem, bearing the shield of arms of New Brunswick surmounted by the Crown. The Premier of New Brunswick presents each recipient with a certificate. Members of the Order are entitled to use the initials O.N.B. after their names.
